Warren Lee Cohen, M. Ed., B.A. Physics, is the director of teacher education at the Rudolf Steiner Centre Toronto. He directed the Foundation Studies program at Emerson College and has been a Waldorf teacher for 20 years. He lectures internationally and is the author of Raising the Soul and Baking Bread with Children.

Waldorf education is a time tested approach to helping children develop essential intellectual, social and manual capacities for life. Fundamental skills such as writing, reading, mathematics and science are emphasized as are complimentary disciplines such as music, art, movement and drama. An essentially artistic approach to academic subjects deepens students' interest in learning and gives them a meaningful context in which to build upon. It facilitates children growing with what they learn each day so that they can put it into practice to meet life's ever changing set of challenges. Waldorf education truly is education for life.
